European Norms (ENs or European Standards) exist for three levels of diver qualifications and two levels of instructor. These standards were agreed by a team of European experts and are recognised across the region and beyond as benchmarks of quality for diver training.

Many training organisations aim to conduct their courses in line with these standards, but some have been validated by a rigorous auditing programme conducted by the European Underwater Federation Certification Body.

We offer courses from a training system that has been through this process. If you take a course that is equivalent to one of the European Standards, your final qualification can bear an additional statement showing that EUF certifies that qualification as meeting the requirements of a European Norm. It is like getting two qualifications for the price of one!

When a training system has been examined and approved by the EUF Certification Body, you can be sure that it has met the state-of-the-art requirements of the European Standards in terms of content, educational support and quality control. The EUF Certification Body employs professional standardisation experts and diving experts to inspect training organisations. These experts are completely independent of the agencies they audit, so you can be confident that their opinions have been objective.

Any diving qualification bearing the EUF Certification wording is widely recognised and accepted internationally. It is your assurance of quality diver training.
